

Fire and Ice- Something Elementary

Guy Respaud

The grapes and expectations hang high when striving for a warm spot under -100°C . That is why there can be some really hot action in the coldest spot in the Ortenau Area. The painter Guy Respaud has x-ray eyes and swings his brush as accurately as a color printer. Above all, though, he has a feeling for history and a gift for capturing the elementary. „Fire and Ice“ hints at the reason why his heart beats for the Tango. The reasons why he portrayed the heart of the Tango at the core of all the essential elements: its pump, gas separator, evaporator, high temperature cooler, sliding valve, cooling block. Cool! Astor Piazzolla's score located between a penguin and a spotted fire salamander connects the deepest tones and the hottest emotions.

The Offenburg witch in the distance hints at the fact that the Tango is an Offenburger from the Ortenau area. This is an important aspect that differentiates this thermostat's family tree from that of the competition. The lowest temperature in Offenburg memory is -20°C . A temperature where frozen chicken feel somewhat comfortable. The Big Unistat's absolute zero is a hundred degrees less, namely -120°C . At the other end of the scale between 300 and 400°C all hell is let loose, as the Offenburg witch also relates.

Before the global circulation of the Tango and the big Unistats there was a general feeling of apathy in the world's thermoregulation community. Conventional methods had settled for the temperature span from -80 to 300°C . Whereas now there is some real excitement below and above this range. The Tscherissili-mask in the first painting of the Tango history collection just smiles at this.
